Dear Sir,

In my abstract for technical disclosure I describe the specifics of my drawings that illuminate my invention. My invention is entitled the 'Card Collector's and Comic Collector's Backpack'.

Both backpacks are generally the same with slight differences. Both have the traditional straps on a regular backpack and open in a book like fashion. They also have a built in binder on the inside with sheets that fit their specific designated job, which is to hold designer cards or comic books.

In the drawing that shows the front of the Card Collector's Backpack it shows how four pockets that are designed to hold a designer card in each pocket are positioned. One sits at each corner while the specific character and logo are positioned in the center.

In the drawing that shows the back of the backpack it is shown how there are one pocket on each side of the straps.

The drawing that represents the front of the Comic Collector's Backpack shows how there is one large pocket that is designed to hold one comic book. The specific character will be placed in the top center and the logo will be placed on the top of the backpack and along the sides.

In the drawing that represents the back of this specific backpack it is shown that there are no pockets on the straps.

Sincerely,

Michael Washington
